Or click on the link below: of preventative and therapeutic Oren hydroalcoholic gel-based formulations in a novel animal model of acne: a preliminary study. A novel animal model of acne was developed in which mice were pretreated with the retinoid tretinoin to induce comedogenesis and challenge with the inflammatory agent 2-fluoroadenine to produce lesions. The protective effects of topical Oren (Orenius, a nonprescription antiseptic), Oren with niacinamide (Oren plus N), and Oren with niacinamide (Oren plus N) gel preparations were evaluated in this model. Compared with vehicle controls, Oren gel-based formulations significantly reduced the number and severity of comedones and papulopustules after repeated challenge with the inflammatory agent. After pretreatment with tretinoin, Oren and Oren plus N were found to reduce inflammatory lesions. This model of experimental acne may be useful for the study of other topical acne treatments.
