Delayed traumatic rupture of the diaphragm after a motor vehicle accident: A case report and review of the literature. Delayed traumatic rupture of the diaphragm is a rare clinical entity, the reported incidence of which ranges from 1 in 100,000 to 1 in 250,000. Most cases are found in individuals who have had a motor vehicle accident and are usually diagnosed as having a subcutaneous diaphragmatic hernia. An incidence of diaphragmatic rupture occurring in the delayed period after a motor vehicle accident is also quite rare. We present a rare case of delayed traumatic rupture of the diaphragm in a 31-year-old woman with a history of a motor vehicle accident that occurred 14 days earlier. She was referred to our department with abdominal pain and vomiting after a motor vehicle accident. Computed tomography revealed subcutaneous diaphragmatic herniation and a herniated intra-abdominal mass. We performed emergency surgery and herniated abdominal organs were returned to the thoracic cavity through a rent in the diaphragm. Postoperatively, she was diagnosed as having delayed traumatic rupture of the diaphragm, and was successfully treated. The patient's postoperative course was uneventful. As we all know, people love to play games and the video game market has grown into a huge industry. In particular, mobile games have grown in popularity due to the fact that they can be played anywhere and are very portable, allowing players to take them almost anywhere and play them whenever and wherever they want to. This market is also one of the most profitable markets, at the moment. But why do people play games? According to a study by Game Camp, 90% of all game players surveyed said that they played games for fun, with 14% saying they did it to relax and 6% saying they did it to help them deal with stress and anger. The other thing that people love about playing games is the feeling that they can use their gaming skills in real life. A survey done by the Entertainment Software Association (ESA) found that 32% of all gamers say they want to use their game skills to make real-life money, while 19% want to find a way to help others in the world. Virus A computer virus (often shortened to virus) is a computer program, typically a self-replicating and malicious program, designed to infiltrate and modify the host computer's software or data without the owner's consent. It is the malicious counterpart to a computer virus. While a computer virus spreads from one computer to another, a worm spreads from one computer to many computers. Viruses may also be found on floppy disks, compact discs, and other media. The name is derived from the word "virus" and its Latin origin, virus, meaning poison or malignant disease, rather than any implications of maliciousness in itself. Some viruses, such as computer worms and Trojan horses, can be self-propagating programs that copy themselves to other host files and programs without the knowledge of the infected computer's user. Viruses commonly have a trojan horse component that appears 1d6a3396d6

And a range of integers [2,3,4,5,7] Is there a way to turn this into [ [2,3,4,5], [5,7] ] In my particular case, the size of the ranges vary, but they are always a subset of a list. A: It looks like you want to find all subranges from a given list: def ranges(lst): return [r for r in [i for i in lst] if not r.start> ranges(range(1,10)) [[1], [2, 3], [4, 5], [6, 7, 8, 9, 10]] Of course, if you pass in a list of ranges, it will return the subranges for that list too, so if you call it with [[2,3,4,5],[5,7]], you'll get: >>> ranges([[2,3,4,5],[5,7]]) [[([2, 3, 4, 5], [5, 7]), [5, 7], [5, 7]] A:>>> [ [i,j] for i in range(1,11) for j in range(i,11) if j!=5] [[(2, 3), (4, 5), (6, 7), (8, 9), (10, 11)] A: In python 2.7, you can use the map() builtin to do this in one line: >>> a = [1,2,3,4,5] >>> [l for l in a[:-1]
