The purpose of this study was to assess the antibacterial effectiveness of multi-antibiotic-loaded polymethyl methacrylate bone cement. Segmental acetabular defects were produced in 34 New Zealand white rabbits and the defects were filled with a combination of tetracycline hydrochloride and tobramycin. The rabbits were divided randomly into 2 groups: Group 1 (control) received no antibiotics, and group 2 received antibiotics plus an antibiotic-loaded cement. Microbiological studies were performed after 3 months of implantation. Although all samples from the control group were contaminated with bacteria, 68.8% of the samples from group 2 (compared with 14.3% from group 1) were microbiologically sterile. It was concluded that multi-antibiotic-loaded polymethyl methacrylate bone cement can reduce the risk of postoperative infection and enhance the rate of bony union in infected bone defects.Q: How to develop the concept of Morphism to send a JavaScript object to Server side using AngularJS service So far we have completed the web service and the client side Angular application. We have created the entities using Json.net and also the data is coming in fine. The problem I am facing is to send the JavaScript Object back to the server using a service. The issue is the data is getting lost in transit, since the data is in string format. What I intend to do is create a new Service in AngularJS so that we can send the JSON objects back
